

Our data protection policy

We take the protection of your personal data extremely seriously and would like to explain how we collect and process the data obtained from you as a visitor to our website.

Gathering and processing of personal data

You can visit our website whenever you wish without telling us who you are. Personal data is only collected if you give it to us, for example when you request that we contact you. This data is used and stored only for its intended purpose. Only those officers in the society who need this data to carry out their tasks have access to this data. They are prohibited from using the personal data of members for purposes other than the performance of their respective duties or to pass it on to third parties.

Links to other providers

Please note that our website may contain links to the web pages of other providers to whom this privacy policy does not extend.

Use of cookies

Websites use cookies to make their web pages more user-friendly. Cookies are used to store information on your computer and are managed by your browser. You can use your browser settings to determine how these cookies are to be managed. In addition, you can delete stored cookies if you so wish. If you disable the use of cookies, we cannot guarantee the full functionality of the website.

Your rights

Every person has the following rights under the Data Protection Act:

- the right to information about the data stored on the person
- the right to have incorrect data amended
- the right to have data deleted, if legal obligations permit
- the right to restrict the processing of the person's data
- the right to revoke any already given consent to the use of personal data

In this context we expressly refer to the right of appeal to a data protection authority (Art. 77 GDPR).
